

LLOYD BURTON's ethnic lineage is principally Welsh and English, with ancestors migrating from Europe to Kentucky in the late 1700's; to Ohio and Texas in the 1830's; and to southern Arizona in the early days of the 20th century. He grew up in the Sonoran desert mountains west of Tucson, and attended public school with friends from both the Pasqua Yaqui and Tohono O'Odham tribes, as well as many Chicanos.

He now serves as a professor of law and public policy in the School of Public Affairs, University of Colorado Denver, where he directs the school's Program Concentration in Environmental Policy, Management, and Law. He is also Academic Director of the Place and Native Voice Project.

He has written two books on indigenous peoples and public land law and policy: AMERICAN INDIAN WATER RIGHTS AND THE LIMITS OF LAW (Lawrence, KS: University Press of Kansas, 1991); and WORSHIP AND WILDERNESS – CULTURE, RELIGION, AND LAW IN PUBLIC LANDS MANAGEMENT (Madison, WI: University of Wisconsin Press, 2002). In 1984, he became the first graduate of the Ph.D. Program in Jurisprudence and Social Policy from the School of Law (Boalt Hall), University of California, Berkeley.